

News

Emerging Market Spotlight

The good news from China ... and the bad

James Syme

06 Jul 2022

The Chinese economy remains weak but May and June have seen improving data and growing evidence of fiscal and monetary policy support. Data in July and August will be crucial to ascertain whether policymakers can reverse a slowdown that is largely of their own making.

First the good news: credit growth grew by more than expected in May. New social financing was RMB 2.8tn for May, with growth in balances outstanding improving to 10.5% YoY from 10.2% in April. New RMB loans were RMB 1.8tn, again showing acceleration, with growth of 11.0% YoY from 10.9% in April. In the credit growth mix, government borrowing was the key driver. Government bond issuance was RMB 1.06tn in May, two-thirds of which were local government bonds. Corporate short-term loans increased by RMB 264bn in May and corporate bills financing increased by RMB 713bn. Together, these reflect both increasing fiscal stimulus and growing private sector confidence in the economic outlook.

May and June also saw more signs of direct economic intervention by policymakers: the People's Bank of China and the banking regulator have repeatedly called for a stabilisation in growth and encouraged financial institutions to boost lending. PBoC Deputy Governor Chen Yulu has said that stabilising economic growth is a top priority and that the central bank will support the weakest sectors, and PBoC Governor Yi Gang met with major financial institutions and called on them to accelerate the delivery of approved loans and to maintain growth in property loans.

There is more good news in terms of some high-frequency indicators: passenger volume in the metro systems of most major cities has recovered to levels seen before the most recent Covid-19 wave. Air travel passenger numbers have also recovered, although not quite to the levels seen before the recent wave. In late June it was about 20% lower, compared to 80% lower in April. Cinema audiences have also bounced back, with 2.5 million visits per day in the last week of June. These activity recoveries have driven improved sentiment in service sectors. Services PMI was 54.3 in June, well into expansionary levels and higher than manufacturing PMI.

Secondly, though, the bad news: in the credit data, household long-term loans continued to decrease, reflecting the ongoing deep contraction in residential property sales. In major cities, home sales contracted by 48% YoY in May, having been down 54% YoY in April. June may have seen some recovery, on the back of significant policy support for the sector: the PBoC has cut mortgage rates by about 60bps and local governments have applied various measures to boost the sector. The June recovery does not yet look like more than the completion of delayed transactions and is nowhere near the bounce-back recovery we saw in mid-2020. Construction starts also remain weak. The consumer also looks in poor shape – retail sales in May were -6.7% YoY (better than -11.1% YoY in April).

With the Chinese government having got on top of this most recent wave, some recovery is evident. However, to turn more positive, we need to see either much more assertive fiscal and monetary policy driving growth, or a strong recovery in the property sector, or the kinds of vaccination coverage that will allow China to move on from its current zero-Covid policies. We continue to monitor Chinese data closely, looking for signs of a further positive shift, but in its absence, we remain underweight Chinese equities and defensively positioned within our Chinese sub-portfolio.

All data J O Hambro or Bloomberg unless otherwise stated.

James Syme is Senior Fund Manager on the JOHCM Global Emerging Markets Opportunities Fund. For more information click here.

Disclaimer

The information provided on this webpage is for professional advisers only. The value of an investment and the income from it can go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount invested. This may be partly the result of exchange rate fluctuations in investments which have an exposure to foreign currencies. You should be aware that past performance is no guarantee of future performance.

Investors should note that this strategy invests in emerging markets and such investments may carry risks with failed or delayed settlement and with registration and custody of securities. Companies in emerging markets may not be subject to accounting, auditing and financial reporting standards or be subject to the same level of government supervision and regulation as in more developed markets. Government involvement in the economy may affect the value of investments in certain emerging markets and the risk of political instability may be high. The reliability of trading and settlement systems in some emerging markets may not be equal to that available in more developed markets which may result in problems in realising investments. Lack of liquidity and efficiency in certain of the stock markets or foreign exchange markets in certain emerging markets may mean that from time to time the Investment Manager may experience difficulty in purchasing or selling holdings of securities. Furthermore, due to local postal and banking systems, no guarantee can be given that all entitlements attaching to quoted and over-the counter traded securities acquired by this strategy, including those related to dividends, can be realised.

Related Articles

Emerging Markets Spotlight

Inflation is not all bad news in emerging markets

Emerging Markets Spotlight

Floating exchange rates are likely to limit the impact of rising US rates on emerging markets

Legal

This website is issued and approved in the UK by J O Hambro Capital Management Limited, which is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority. Registered office: Level 3, 1 St James's Market, London SW1Y 4AH. Registered in England and Wales under No: 2176004. Issued in the European Union by JOHCM Funds (Ireland) Limited which is authorised by the Central Bank of Ireland. Registered office: Riverside One, Sir John Rogerson's Quay, Dublin 2, Ireland. J O Hambro is a registered trademark owned by and used under licence from Barnham Broom Holdings Limited. JOHCM® is owned by J O Hambro Capital Management Limited. Telephone calls may be recorded.

© 2022 J O Hambro Capital Management Limited. All rights reserved.