

News

Emerging Market Spotlight

Rejection of a left-wing constitution reduces risk for equity investors in Chile, but economic problems remain an obstacle

James Syme

Paul Wimborne

Ada Chan

06 Sep 2022

Given our overweight positions in Mexico and Brazil, why do we not have a position in Chile, Latin America's third-largest market? The answer to that has two parts, each of which is an example of what we consider to be key risks in country-driven emerging market investing.

As we have written before, in recent years Latin America has seen a broad political shift to the left. Chile has been part of this with the 2019-21 cost-of-living protests seeing 1.2m people on the streets of the capital Santiago in October 2019. This led to a hard-fought presidential election in 2021, won by 35-year-old ex-student radical Gabriel Boric with a platform focused on opposition to capitalism and support for social justice and the environment. As well as this electoral shift to more populist politics, Chile has also faced the prospect of a new constitution. A referendum in October 2020 approved the drafting of a new constitution by a specially elected convention, which has since been drafted. The Boric administration has been particularly critical of the mining and forestry industries, as well as calling for the nationalisation of lithium extraction and a large increase in the role of the state in the economy.

Chile's equity market took these developments badly. Previously, the stable and market-friendly nature of Chilean politics had enabled the market to trade at a valuation premium to neighbouring countries, but the forward price/earnings ratio of the IPSA index fell from an average of 15x in 2011-20 to less than 7x in mid-2022.

The first week of September has seen an improvement in the political outlook, with the final popular vote to approve the new constitution rejecting it by 62% to 38%. This means the current constitution will remain, removing a major source of risk to equity investors and suggesting that President Boric has less room for manoeuvre than when elected.

With reduced risk and valuations at all-time lows, does that make Chile attractive to our investment process? Unfortunately, not at this time, because the economy faces some serious challenges that will need to be overcome before the market can see stronger growth and a lower discount rate.

Followers of our process will know that we consider current-account deficit markets like Chile to be inherently cyclical, with periods of strong growth always followed by crises or slowdowns. Chile has enjoyed strong growth in recent years and is now in the downswing. During the Covid pandemic, the government injected USD 27bn of extra spending into a USD 318bn economy (one of the most generous stimulus packages in the emerging world). This was concurrent with the congress passing legislation allowing the public to withdraw their pension savings early. These two measures combined to drive a consumer boom, with real retail sales in 2021 some 23.6% higher than in 2019.

As is typical for current-account deficit markets with booming domestic demand, both inflation and the current account balance have rapidly become serious problems. Inflation, which since 2010 had not exceeded 6%, has ramped to 13.1% in the year to July; the current account deficit, which had been averaging 3.5% of GDP, expanded to 8.8% of GDP in 2Q 2022.

And, as is almost always the case, the unsustainable inflation rate has caused a sharp currency sell-off (the Chilean peso is down 18.1% against the US dollar since the end of 2019, having at one point in July been down 39.5%), which has in turn required brutal interest rate hikes from the central bank (since mid-2021, the policy rate has gone from 0.5% to 10.75%). Ultimately, the only solution is going to be a drastic slowdown in domestic demand, a higher savings rate and a period of export-led growth to repair the external balance, and we generally seek to avoid being invested in markets that are undergoing slowdown and rebalancing. We prefer those we see as heading into upswings, including Mexico and Brazil.

James Symes, Paul Wimborne and Ada Chan manage the JOHCM Global Emerging Markets Opportunities Fund. Find out more here.

Source: J O Hambro or Bloomberg unless otherwise stated.

Disclaimer

The information provided on this webpage is for professional advisers only. This is a marketing communication. Information on the rights of investors can be found here. The registrations of the funds described in this communication may be terminated by JOHCM at its discretion from time to time. The investment promoted concerns the acquisition of shares in a fund and not the underlying assets. Past performance is no guarantee of future performance. The value of an investment and the income from it can fall as well as rise as a result of market and currency fluctuations and you may not get back the amount originally invested. Investing in companies in emerging markets involves higher risk than investing in established economies or securities markets. Emerging Markets may have less stable legal and political systems, which could affect the safe-keeping or value of assets. Investments may include shares in small-cap companies and these tend to be traded less frequently and in lower volumes than larger companies making them potentially less liquid and more volatile. The information communicated here including any expression of opinion is for information purposes only and is given on the understanding that it is not a recommendation.

Related Articles

---

Emerging Markets Spotlight

Energy exporters, or those with relative energy stability, show signs of prospering

Read More

11 August 2022

---

Emerging Markets Spotlight

The good news from China ... and the bad

Read More

05 July 2022

---

Emerging Markets Spotlight

Inflation is not all bad news in emerging markets

Read More

18 June 2022

---

---

Legal

This website is issued and approved in the UK by J O Hambro Capital Management Limited, which is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority. Registered office: Level 3, 1 St James's Market, London SW1Y 4AH. Registered in England and Wales under No: 2176004. Issued in the European Union by JOHCM Funds (Ireland) Limited which is authorised by the Central Bank of Ireland. Registered office: Riverside One, Sir John Rogerson's Quay, Dublin 2, Ireland. J O Hambro is a registered trademark owned by and used under licence from Barnham Broom Holdings Limited. JOHCM® is owned by J O Hambro Capital Management Limited. Telephone calls may be recorded.

© 2022 J O Hambro Capital Management Limited. All rights reserved.